Cool paint colours such as blue, green and gray (with blue/green undertones) suit south facing rooms as they can balance out the effect of the warm light coming in the window. The darker your room is (or north facing), the more 'colourful' you'll want your colour to be as you'll need it to shine through the shadows.

The best way to find a color you can live with is to paint a 4-by-4-foot swatch on the wall and live with it for at least 24 to 48 hours so you can see it in natural and artificial light. "Taking the extra time to do the swatch test is worth it to find a color you'll love living with for years," says Benjamin Moore's Doty Horn.

Diffuse reflection occurs when light reflects off a microscopically rough surface. Light rays which are incident in a beam will diffuse (or scatter) and reflect in a variety of directions. In each case the law of reflection holds: in diffuse reflection, the normals for each individual ray are not oriented in the same direction.
